Journal Poster Abstract: The Indian Journal of Medical Ethics (henceforth, IJME) was born (in 1993) out of the imperative to reorganise healthcare in the country, contest growing corruption in health care and health care research, fight for equity and access, and thus, integrate ethics into health care and health research in India. The IJME has encouraged publication of research, comments, case studies and other material on health care ethics and human rights from the developing world, thereby establishing a platform for reflection and debate on related issues; it has also proactively encouraged the coming together of people actively interested in the improvement of the health care system and health research. The IJME has significantly contributed to the rise and growth of the discipline of Bioethics in India. Towards this goal, it has organized five biennial National Bioethics Conferences (NBC) in collaboration with medical and social science institutes, NGOs and Community Based Organisations (since 2005); the 6th NBC is scheduled for end-2016.

The IJME is the only peer-reviewed and indexed medical ethics and bioethics journal out of India. The journal has a vibrant web presence, and notwithstanding its financial challenges, it has been able to survive the test of time to ensure complete free access to its web users, while charging a very moderate subscription fee for the print edition. The IJME does not accept any donation/funding from health care-related companies.
